

Corsica: Into the Unknown

Janek and Nur, two adventurous companions, embarked on an impulsive quest to conquer the formidable GR 20 (Grande Randonnée), one of Europe's toughest long-distance hiking trails. A daunting pilgrimage spanning a vast 180 kilometres, beset with an unforgiving elevation gain of approximately 12 kilometres in total.

The standard time to complete the trail is around two weeks. However, provoked by one of their friends who said: "My brother did it in one week", with determination and a touch of recklessness they decided to finish it within one week as well. Their lack of preparation and hiking equipment consisting of sneakers, shorts, t-shirts and sticks found on the way didn't deter them from pursuing their goal of completing the challenging trail in just one week. With their heavy backpacks each 15 kilograms, filled with a week's worth of food and supplies, they began their journey...
